HOW //

ToutSuite Social Club is changing the game; the concept expands far beyond the ToutSuite’s headquarters to members around the world; from Chatanooga to Paris. How does it all work? For the brand, the social club’s plush in-house suites set a lounge-style scene using state-of-the-art camera systems that allow the production team to broadcast 360-degree panoramas of the event.

On the consumer front, using their active webcams, members are able to log in via live video and twitter interactivity and communicate with both the in-studio guest(s), fellow attendees and hundreds of online participants. Members and brand makers get to chat, observe and interact better than if they were attending the event in-person. On-demand archive viewing and access to personal web journals from the brand makers are available post-event.

WHO //

The game changers

Susan Quinn and Didier Loustau are going meta- social, expanding beyond the boundaries of traditional video conferencing with an interactive, salon-style video platform that connects consumers from all over the world to the people behind their favorite brands. Susan’s the tech entrepreneur. Didier’s the content curator. And they’re both bringing their formidable expertise to the table.

Susan Quinn:

As a founder of two tech start-ups, Susan returns to the streaming media world where she first made a name for herself in the 1990s with Wordcasters, Inc., an innovative angel-funded start up where she conceived, developed and launched live text streaming to the world at large. The self-taught entrepreneur is excited to re-enter the tech space in order to create this revolutionary online community that is ToutSuite Social Club.

Didier Loustau:

Didier landed in Chicago in 1989, but it wasn’t until he arrived in Napa in 1994 that his unique expertise and skill – not to mention that charming French accent - helped establish Didier as a respected Bon Vivant in the Napa Valley. In 1997, Didier opened the first Dean & DeLuca on the west coast and remained with the company as the senior wine buyer until 2004. That same year, he launched DDC Shipping, LLC, an international wine shipping company specializing in very small boutique winery clients, and Loustau Wines & Marketing, a company founded upon the premise that scores of wine drinkers were missing out on mind blowing wines being made in minute quantities by talented individuals; artisans who invested their time, energy and (most importantly) their money in their craft rather than in getting their 15 minutes of fame.
